Course Description

This course responds to the need of the Korean society to campaign for education reform in order to address social issues that result from the increasing multi cultural characterization of Korea. In particular, this course is aimed at: helping recognize and challenge biases and notions of race, culture, language, social justice, and multi cultural education; increasing the awareness levels on the problems and opportunities that multiculturalism brings to the society; and building the capacity to exercise affirmative action and leadership in theoretical and practical ways. The theoretical approach is done by immersing into schools of thought that help explain the multicultural state of Korea, while the practical is done by conducting a community project, which deals with a social issue or phenomenon that relates to both multiculturalism and education or multicultural education in Korea. The project prompts the students to investigate a problem, project, or program in the community and analyze it extensively using a rubric that is proposed and agreed upon in class.
