Course Description

This course examines the concept of New Zealand youth in historical, economical, and political contexts. The concept of youth is examined as a fundamental part of human development. The way in which we learn about youth in New Zealand is through sport, media, music, body image, technology, and social networking. Students explore how the social environment shapes young people, and they examine the challenges and opportunities New Zealand youth face. Students critically evaluate the portrayal of New Zealand youth in society and describe the strategies to promote positive New Zealand youth development.
