Course Description
This course discusses the foreign policy of the Soviet Union and East-European countries during times of the so called Cold War. It analyses the development of international relations with special emphasis on Eastern Europe. It focuses on basic and forming milestones of Soviet foreign policy, its principles, strategies, and direction. The course emphasizes the rivalry of Eastern and Western countries during the Cold War; with the lectures devoted to the foreign policy of the Soviet satellites. The course also analyzes relations between the Soviet Union (Soviet bloc), Middle East, Near Asia, Far East, Africa, Latin America, China, and others. The course explores key assumptions of Soviet foreign policy, such as ideology, propaganda, and viewing of others. The course consists of lectures and seminars. Lectures offer key information to the topic while seminars develop acquired knowledge through discussions, examples, presentations, and projections.
