Course Description

This course provides a systematic analysis of the conception and experience of cultural crisis in modern society. Tracing the historical evolution of the concept of culture as well as changes in material and affective conditions of modern life, the course examines what has contributed to a sense of crisis in culture around the two world wars. Through discussions of a wide range of literary and critical texts by E. M. Forster, D. H. Lawrence, Hannah Arendt, Adorno, Horkheimer, and Terry Eagleton, the course develops a better understanding of the mood, anxieties, and atmosphere of the early twentieth century, even as it encourages them to reflect on their own cultural environment today.
