Course Description
This course offers a broad overview of the history of Europe (including areas on both sides of the Mediterranean) from late Antiquity to the whole 15th century. It covers problems of continuity and change in society, politics, religion, and culture. It introduces topics and debates about the fate of the Roman Empire; the christianization of Europe; the impact of the rise of Islam; the meaning of the age of Charlemagne; the centuries of the Crusades and the European economic “take-off”; the effects of the great plagues and revolts of the 14th centuries; and the Renaissance, “modernity,” and the origins of European states. Students explore how a series of vast transformations formed European culture and reflect on general themes, such as the interaction of religious orthodoxy and dissent, shifting perceptions of gender, and the friction between imperialist drives and cultural coexistence. Students in this option undertake the fall-term portion of the yearlong course European History 400-1500.
