Course Description

Planning and urban management systems vary considerably internationally. Differences in history, culture, ideology, law, economy, and society mean that there are significant differences in planning policies, planning law, and ultimately in the outcomes of planning systems. This course gives students an appreciation of how different planning systems operate. Given the number and variety of planning systems, only a selection of examples is examined by some guest speakers. In addition to the analysis of a selection of countries the European Spatial Development Perspective (ESDP) is also examined.
