Course Description

This course provides an intensive study of some of the main philosophical ideas and achievements of the Enlightenment era. It combines the reading of classical texts with works written by non-canonical figures, such as women philosophers, philosophers of color, and non-Christian philosophers. With a critical perspective, it reassesses the ambivalent nature of the concept of science and scientific method as well as reflects on the political ideas of the state, religious tolerance, freedom of speech, gender, and race.
