Course Description

This course is for the first-year students of the International Baccalaureate Class of the Chinese Department, hoping to guide the foreign students in the class to understand Chinese in a systematic way. The phonetics, phonology, characters, vocabulary, grammar, and pragmatics of Chinese will be discussed in class. There are specific topics every week (see the weekly schedule for details), and in principle, they are taught one by one according to the textbook chapters. In class, besides the teacher's explanation of various language phenomena, students will also practice and analyze language phenomena, and arrange classroom quizzes or homework as appropriate. It is hoped that through this method, students can actually understand what they have learned, apply it to daily language analysis, and develop a certain level of language observation and vigilance.
