Course Description

This course introduces the social scientific analysis of culture, society, and identity, including issues of identity politics, socialisation, the self in everyday life, stigma, the politics of ethnicity, and the social dynamics of power. Students explore a range of key themes in the discipline of sociology. The course addresses the social processes of socialisation, social interaction, and identity construction; core aspects of institutional life, such as the family, religion, education, politics, and the economy; as well as drivers of social change, such as urbanisation, sustainability, globalization, and social movements.
