Course Description
This course has two main purposes. The first is to develop a comparative understanding of the education systems between Japan and other countries. The second is to examine contemporary Japanese education processes, along with related policies and practices, and to recognize their impact on Japanese society. To accomplish these purposes, each student is expected to share their knowledge and experience about the success and failure of their home-countries' education systems with other students and contribute to active discussions in class. Special attention is given to an examination of comparative and contrasting policies, practices, and issues in education as they unfold in Japan and students' home countries.
