Course Description

This course explores the relationship between philanthropy in its many expressions, the corresponding non-profit sector, and the oceans. The course is divided into three sections: 1) Philanthropy: definitions, practices, institutions; 2) Oceans: key issues, stakeholders and nongovernmental actors; 3) Philanthropic responses for the oceans and the future. Texts from different fields such as sociology, history, international relations, and economics are used to take a philanthropic lens of a transboundary issue in an international context. Students analyze the relationships between the different actors (individuals, nongovernmental organizations, government, for-profit business, local and global communities), evaluate the issues and assess the complexity of the situation, and think critically taking into account cultural influences, tradition, economic and political approaches, and the notion of overall sustainability.
