Course Description

This course covers the procedures, formats, and conventions of scriptwriting, and the skills and attitudes necessary to produce acceptable writing according to those conventions. This is partly a “creative writing” course, and regular reading and writing is required. Students learn advanced skills in writing scripts for selected media (e.g. film, television, theater, computer games); become aware of how script-writing skills are shaped by production processes; create plots, narrative structures, characters, and dialogue suitable for different media; and learn how existing stories can be adapted and developed in the writing of scripts for different media.
