Course Description

Students learn to participate actively in discussions on various topics, to give their opinion, to negotiate solutions in small groups and to find compromises. They acquire language structures and skills to reproduce information and present clearly structured presentations. In addition, students train to extract important information and detailed statements from texts on different academic fields. Using videos and listening exercises, students learn to understand longer academic texts and to filter for information on specific aspects. Regular writing exercises help students practice to present and justify their opinion on current topics, and to write personal accounts and commentaries. The class discusses current events in German society and in Berlin and examines news and points of view surrounding the topics of university, academic research, and international exchange. Finally, students also analyze language itself: learning German, language usage, communication, and intercultural aspects.
