Course Description

This course improves leadership in teams while some of the principles can be applied to organizations. To achieve this objective, the professor provides various principles and strategies drawn on solid empirical research to help future managers increase the probability of success. The course presents both the conceptual understanding and the behavioral skills required to lead teams and organizations successfully. Students will draw from their own experiences in discussing team and organization management skills and learn from classmates' experience sharing. Topics will include leadership styles, individual decision making, team selection, team creativity, team diagnosis, team conflict, etc. In addition, students learn how to manage and work in cross-cultural teams through the final team project in which students will be paired up with students from different countries.
