Course Description

The course examines the historical importance of maritime trade and how understanding the water, winds, and currents has helped societies flourish. This course explores Asian trade history through the East China Sea, South China Sea, Bay of Bengal, and Arabian Sea and includes a survey of maritime tools as well as the importance of port cities. The course is broken up into three parts: humanism-geographical condition of each sea area in Asia (space), total chronological change (time), and long distance travelers/peoples story (humankind).
