Course Description

This course focuses on the deep cultural learning and personal growth that can result from adjusting to life in another country. It addresses the psychology of adjusting to foreign experiences, including but not exclusive to, how experiences abroad can be either deep or shallow. The course also discusses the impact of living abroad on one's values and identity.

The course requires students to conduct an interview with someone about their intercultural experiences, then analyzing and presenting their findings to the group. The course aims to have students garner the most benefit from their intercultural experiences.
