Course Description

This course is organized around research-based performance projects. These projects are based on detailed examinations of popular performance genres (for example, variety theater, slapstick, cabaret, pantomime, and radio comedy). Students develop performance skills, including addressing an audience, developing a stage persona, dancing, singing, or simple acrobatics. Students develop their material to create a show in the style of an assigned popular performance genre, which is performed to a public audience.
