Course Description

This course addresses contemporary thought on child abuse, child sexual abuse, sexual violence, domestic violence, and prostitution in Ireland and includes an overview of the social and justice responses to these problems. The course explores social justice and human rights frameworks to critically appraise the key issues, and it draws on a range of empirical data, psychological and sociological theory, and practice experience to consider these issues in Ireland in an international context. The didactic lecture format is interspersed with guest lectures, given by a number of experienced practitioners providing services within the child abuse and domestic and sexual violence systems in Ireland.
