Course Description
This course offers an introduction to organization behavior and design. The course strengthens analytical skills and enables students to assess behavior in work environments, organizations' forms and structures, and the root causes of their performance. This is a useful skill to cultivate for a variety of managerial roles and positions and it is indispensable for working in a start-up or in family business, for managing a company, consulting, auditing, and investment banking. The course discusses topics including human behavior inside an organization; individual differences such as personality, values, perception, motivations, and decisions; groups and group dynamics; power and leadership; conflict and negotiation; organizational structures; people management; organizational and international culture; and organizational change.
