Course Description

Marriage, social relations, crime, family life, and religion are all important social phenomena. The behavior of people in these social contexts has major consequences for society. These social phenomena were traditionally outside the scope of economists, but are increasingly entering their field of research. This course uses economic theories and empirical research to analyze these social phenomena. Students learn to understand and analyze a wide range of social phenomena from an economic point of view and to assess the validity of claims based on empirical research.
