Course Description

This course examines the role of corporate responsibility and encourages students to reflect on their own personal ethical views as they may apply them in complex business situations in culturally specific contexts. The course introduces fundamentals of ethics and responsible decision-making in business and other social contexts in their future professional careers. Students discuss complex analytical skills in evaluating the multifaceted contexts to assist them as future leaders and professionals when coming up with innovative solutions and making individual-level and company-level decisions about the proper courses of action considering ethical behavior, social responsibility, and environmental sustainability. Students apply theoretical knowledge of concepts such as culture of organizations, leadership styles, and corporate governance, when solving real-world cases in culture-specific contexts. Students participate in class discussions and debates, work in groups, and analyze case studies.
