Course Description

This course examines visual adaptations of Japanese literary works. Through comparative analysis of textual and visual media, the course examines issues including the relationship between content and style, politics of representation (such as hyper femininity/masculinity), intended readership/audience, aesthetics, and genre characteristics. The course covers Japanese cinema as the artistic expression of individual directors to provide better understanding of the history of Japanese society as reflected and documented in literature and popular culture. Assessment: papers, class participation, presentation.
