Course Description

This is a two part course consisting of a lecture and a seminar. The lecture provides an overview of some of the main topics in the economics and politics of development. The first part of the course traces the history of ideas in economic and social development covering, among others, modernization theories and state-led industrialization strategies in the post-war era. The second part of the course covers a range of selected topics in development micro- and macroeconomics. During the seminar, students present on various aspects of economic development and conduct case studies on Latin American countries. The lecture also includes guest speakers from various international bodies. For non-Economics majors, it is possible to take only the lecture and still earn a grade, Economics majors have to take both the lecture and the seminar.
