Course Description

The course studies contemporary biomedical debates as well as the underlying philosophical and theological principles, values, and views of the human being. The course examines the different Irish, European, and international argumentations and legislations that these debates have produced. Other course topics include issues at the beginning and at the end of human life, the possible conflict between parents' and children's perspectives, and the visions of society and humanity implied in positions on advance care directives. Films and excerpts from science fiction provide additional avenues to the topics.
