Course Description
This one-semester course examines the murder of six million Jews and several million non-Jews by Nazi Germany and its accomplices. It assesses the progression from the stigmatization, definition, expropriation, and forced expulsion of Germany's Jews to the wartime policies of directed deportation and then murder of Jews and other "racial enemies" across the European continent. It also examines the responses of the victims and of the outside world to the genocide, and reflects on some of the historiographical and cultural legacies of the events.
