Course Description

The course analyzes security threats in post-Soviet Eurasia theoretically as well as engages in extensive empirical analysis of these threats, critically assessing their implication for regional and international politics and security. The course covers three Caucasian (Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan), five Central Asian (Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, and Turkmenistan), three "new Eastern European" (Moldova, Ukraine, and Belarus) and three Baltic (Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania) states in order to reach a better understanding of the commonalities and differences across the post-Soviet space. The course introduces the current debates on the definition of security, competing theoretical perspectives in the security literature and the related concepts of securitization and risk society. The course includes empirical and region-specific discussion cutting-edge research in the studies of terrorism, corruption, organized crime, insurgency, and other threats.
