Course Description

This course provides a study of cooperatives and social enterprises as democratic companies centered around satisfying the needs of their associates and of the communities in which they operate. It examines concepts and topics such as labor unions, credit associations, consumer associations, foundations, fair trade, nonprofit organizations, and other civil society organizations. The course compares and contrasts the diverse types of companies and enterprises present at a national level, distinguishes the key dimensions for the development of a cooperative or social enterprise, and identifies the real and potential contributions of cooperatives and social enterprises.
