Course Description

This course examines the Caribbean, with specific attention to the historical, environmental, socio-cultural features of modern existence that have come to constitute Caribbean experience. Special attention is given to moving beyond a linguistically singular and myopic vision of the Caribbean, to one that emphasizes its complexities and contradictions through a comparative lens. While it explores the various routes of cultural formation, it also explores the social institutions that shaped the region and the processes of socialization and indigenization that took root.
