Course Description

Focusing on the Anglophone world (USA, Canada, Ireland, Britain, and Australia in particular), this seminar course examines the emergence of the radical labor ideologies of syndicalism (or industrial unionism) and communism in the early 20th century. It considers the organizational forms and cultures of the principal movements espousing these ideologies (i.e., the 'Wobblies', originating in the US, c.1905; the Russian-dominated Communist movement, post-1917), discuss the relationship of one to the other, and compare their orientations towards social democratic and nationalist movements.
