Course Description

This course offers an in-depth overview of the European Neighborhood Policy (ENP) from its theoretical as well as practical aspects. The course particularly focuses on the discussions around ENP as the main foreign policy tool with which the European Union (EU) manages its relations with its neighbors. It also draws attention to regional aspects of the policy in light of current developments in ENP partner states in the southern and eastern neighborhood. Second, the course examines how the EU functions as a foreign policy actor, especially the interplay between EU institutions and member states. This element of the course appeals to those who are more practice oriented; as part of the course visits EU institutions and other international organizations whose work directly relate to EU foreign policy. In addition, the course explores the relevance of the European Neighborhood Policy for International Relations (IR) by considering the way it has been studied. This aspect of the course is interesting for those who are concerned with the current theoretical and methodological debates in IR. Prerequisites for this course are an introductory International Relations course, an introductory globalization and politics course, and it is recommended to have taken a course on European integration.
