Course Description

This course examines the politics of East Asia, understood to include countries spanning from China, Japan, and the two Koreas in the northeast to Singapore, Indonesia and the others in the southeast. They cover an area conventionally treated as two separate geographical regions, i.e. the East Asia and the Southeast Asia. You can in a sense say that in this class we are talking about a “greater” East Asia, covering the whole region along the West Pacific Rim. We also deal with important pan-East Asia factors and issues. This way, the class intends to give a broad body of subject and knowledge to work on.
