Course Description
This course examines the meaning of globalization and its potential benefits and risks for Africa and Africans. The primary objectives of this course are to debate globalization and its implications for Africa, develop understanding of key concepts and theories related to globalization, and discuss specific cases from Africa related to globalization. Some key elements explored in this course are the role of African actors and institutions in linking or delinking from globalization, the relationship between globalization and natural resources with respect to cost/benefit sharing, and conflicts related to scarcity and abundance. Students also examine globalization as it relates to the role of state, migration both within and outside of Africa, and the impact of climate change. Students gain knowledge about perspectives on and implications of globalization in relation to a range of key actors, processes, relationships, and practices in Africa. Students choose a sub-topic to focus on and select relevant literature to independently and critically analyze the sub-topic in question and place it within the overall context of globalization.
