Course Description

This course examines the ways in which writers attempted to come to terms with often bewilderingly rapid changes in urban life and landscape. The course traces how the modern city shaped contemporary texts and also how readers' ideas of the modern city were in turn shaped by those texts. Although the course is divided into five discrete sections, these are intended to overlap in a way that allows students to form more general conclusions about modernity and the city in Britain. Apart from the core texts, the course also examines contextual and theoretical material relevant to this topic.
