Course Description

This course examines the theoretical framework of social movements in the contemporary city and the concept of belonging of social subjects. It provides an analysis of ethnic and urban conflict in Mexico and Latin America based on disputes over natural, territorial and rights-related resources. The course also looks at the processes of migration and forced displacement in urban and rural contexts to understand the sociocultural construction of social subjects, as well as qualitative methods in scientific research and their application in the characterization of subjects, analysis on belonging, and appropriation of territory.
