Course Description
This course presents a study of Spanish language phonetics and phonology and examines dialectal variation within Spain and across Latin America. The first portion of the course surveys phonemes; physiological sound articulation; the consonants and vowels of the Spanish language; accent and intonation; and syllabification. The latter portion of the course studies Spanish language register and dialect; regional variation among northern Spain, Andalusia, and the Canary Islands; phonetic and lexical variation in Latin American Spanish; and the influence of indigenous languages in Latin America. Assessment is based on participation, assignments, midterm, and final exam.
