Course Description

This course provides an overview of the rationale, role, and impact of public sector intervention in the economy. It begins with a discussion of the fundamentals of public economics, including instruments of public intervention in the case of market failure, equity, redistribution, and social welfare. The course also examines public expenditure, government revenue, and fiscal federalism in conjunction with taxation theories for indirect taxes on consumption, as well as direct personal and corporate income taxes. Particular focus is paid to the study of the current public economics of Spain.
