Course Description
This course introduces notions of Indigenous peoples, populations and communities through a number of academic and Indigenous perspectives. Using case studies the course explores five major subject areas: Cultures and Language; Politics, Policy and Law; Environment and Development; Health and Well being; and Cultural Arts. The course is a starting point for the Australian Indigenous Studies Major and Minor, and complements a variety of allied fields of study. The course deploys social science theories and Indigenous knowledge frameworks to analyze the relationship of Indigenous peoples their land and seas and with wider Australia through four major themes: identity, equity, representation and resilience. A critical component of the course is two-way learning that draws on Indigenous and Western domains of knowledge as presented by both Indigenous and non-Indigenous academics and cultural practitioners.
