Course Description

The course focuses on various literary and cinematic depictions of the human search for identity and the meaning of self through a series of challenging texts and films from a variety of cultures. As the overarching theme of 'Frontiers' suggests, the texts and films chosen for this course all share a focus on moments in which the individual is confronted by new frontiers, new borders, forcing a reappraisal of identity and selfhood. As always in Comparative Literature courses, the bringing together of the threads from the different texts and films is largely in the hands of the students, through discussion, and through comparative essays.
