Course Description

This course is designed to immerse in some of the central debater of contemporary western philosophy. To achieve this goal, we will engage in a critical exploration of such topics as knowledge and certainty, science and method, freedom and determinism, and authority and the state. A student will be expected to be able to articulate the various philosophical problems considered in the course and to assess the various arguments pro and con surrounding the proposed solutions. The course is fundamentally based on reading, discussing and writing about distinct philosophical questions.
