Course Description

This course deals with the links between the European Union (EU) and International Relations (IR). It addresses how the academic field of International Relations has theorized both the European Union's integration and its role in Global Politics. For analytical purposes, the European Union is considered an international organization (IO). Notwithstanding its specific characteristics, this conceptual move allows students to analyze the European Union through the lens of International Relations theories. This course presents various IR theoretical perspectives to illuminate different questions pertaining to the EU and more specifically to its role in the field of global security. It looks at three major themes: (1) European Union and Integration theories; (2) EU power or not: EU in Global Security; (3) Dynamics of IOs: the case of the EU.
