Course Description
This course offers a study of the politics of social states and non-capitalist political development options with the U.S.S.R. and China as examples of socialist state experiments. It examines the relationship between efforts at socio-economic transformation and the politics of state origin, consolidation, and development in non-capitalist politics. This course explores the role and character of state institutions in these processes, specifically the function of ideology in non-capitalist, anti-systemic politics. It focuses on the inter-relationship and interaction of anti-systemic politics with international development of systemic state structures.
