Course Description

This course is open to students interested in both European Union (EU) affairs and International Relations. It aims at understanding what role the EU can play in a world confronted to new and daunting challenges. In a global context in which power politics between nation-states is on the rise and multilateral rules are jeopardized by populist governments, the real challenge for Europe is precisely to assess its capacity to survive and defend its common interests on the basis of multilateral rules and cooperation rather than on the use of force. Students consider if Europe is capable of overcoming its internal problems in order to cope with global challenges and whether the lack of leadership in the United States provides an opportunity for Europe.
