Course Description
This course offers the tools to build Spanish language fluency by introducing and contextualizing vocabulary and grammar typically used in a health care setting or involving health-related issues. It reinforces communicative competence by focusing on complex grammatical structures through analysis, discussion, and debate of literary sources from current events related to health and cultural aspects of Hispano-America and the Dominican Republic. The course is divided into four units: introduction to Spanish for the health sciences; infectious diseases and community; health institutions; a special case in health culture.
