Course Description
Employing a multidisciplinary approach to the understanding of American society, culture and history, from the 15th century to early 20th century, this course provides a new introduction to the very idea and the founding history of America. With touchstone attention to Asia (notably India, Japan, and China) in the idea of America, the diverse sources of its people, African, European, Native American, and more, this course takes the history of matters African American as a central guide. Lectures will be given in English during the first in-class session each week (MGU second period Mondays); the presentation of visual material, mainly film and video, followed by in-depth in-class group discussion in English, will occupy the second in-class session each week (MGU fourth period Mondays). The screening and discussion of film, video and other visual material, as well as the listening and discussion of music, will all be core elements in the work of this course.
