Course Description

In a trend that has been shared by all of the liberal democracies, politics has become increasingly personalized. The renewed focus on the personalization of politics adopts a comparison stance between “party democracy” and “audience democracy”. It emphasizes the loosening grip of class-based politics and the increasing role of individual politicians in determining how people view politics and how they express their political preferences. This seminar provides students with an overview of the different spheres (institutions, political parties, political discourse, political campaigns, and voting behavior) in which this personalization trend impacts our perception of politics, and investigates the issue whether or not there is a significant personalization of Western politics.
