Course Description

In 1899, Queen Victoria ruled a vast overseas empire, well over half the population could not vote, the Independent Labour party had no MPs, sex between men was a crime and convicted murderers were hung. By 1990, the empire had fallen, all adult men and women had been enfranchised, the Labour party had over 225 MPs, including open homosexuals. This course will examine these profound transformations, paying particular attention to political allegiance, government policy, and social attitudes.
