Course Description

This course in public economics discusses the basic ideas and magnitudes of state intervention in the economy and budget tools. It offers an introduction to the theory of taxation, analyzing the incidences of taxes and their effects on behavior. This course explores some fundamental ideas about equity, well-being, and redistribution. Additional topics include: optimal taxation, aspects of the central tax figures, fiscal decentralization, and the economic policy of taxation. Students are expected to have completed coursework in mathematic analysis, including an introduction to constrained optimization, and intermediate microeconomics, including an introduction to general equilibrium.
