Course Description

This course refines students' understanding and application of the content, language, methods, and production of a critically reflective body of work that draws upon the historical and contemporary references in current practice. Through self-initiated study and externally focused projects students engage in a range of professional contexts. Students are encouraged to independently produce work and discuss it through individual tutorials, group and cross-school critiques, and seminars in a specialist studio environment. The plan of study begins to define individual concerns and establishes working patterns to facilitate progress. The course encourages students to grow and extend their practice out with the confines of the college environment and reach a broader, more diverse audience. Students begin to work in an independent manner and participate in project space presentations and external exhibitions. Regular tutorial support, invited artists, gallery visits, lectures, and workshops contribute to learning.
