Course Description

This course examines the political, social, and moral dimensions of what people say and what they know. It covers how speech is connected with moral wrongness, harm, liberty, resistance, and social justice and how knowledge may be inextricably linked with what we hear and learn from news media, social media, radio, television, and the internet. It considers some contemporary topics in social epistemology and philosophy of language such as lying, bullshitting, dogwhistling, grandstanding, misleading, and silencing.
