Course Description

This class focuses on the political processes involved in establishing U.S. trade policy since 1900. The course also looks at why trade politics have become so contentious over the past century, paying particular attention to the relationship between trade issues and the election of Donald Trump in 2016. Discussion topics include key events in the history of U.S. trade policy since 1900, political obstacles facing U.S. officials as they attempt to formulate trade policy, and the central role that trade has played and will continue to play in contemporary U.S. politics.
